One small dummy airfield has been built at Hsiaoohinp'uli (小金浦里)* about 5 kilometers east of Pakch'on (125-35, 39-44) near Sinanju, North Korea. This airfield is on level ground and has a concrete runway about one centimeter thick. Several concealed runways have been built also. Over 20 dummy planes made from fiber (sic) have been built at the airfield, as well as dummy control towers, etc. This airfield appears the same as an actual airfield. Four anti-aircraft gun positions have been constructed on hills northwest of the dummy airfield. Looking from Sinanju, the anti-aircraft gun positions are on a lower peak which is among three higher peaks northwest of the airfield, at the foot of the hills slightly southeast of Pakch'on. This dummy airfield has been built to mislead the United Nations forces in target identification and to facilitate waste of their ammunition.
